No. 304 2nd October 2015

Please remember there should be no nuts in school—we have 5 children with nut allergies, and one who suffers very extreme reactions from the slightest contact with nuts, or even contact with someone who has themselves been in contact with nuts.

Thank you for £70

raised for

Macmillan Nurses

by the cake sale last week

Particular thanks to Mrs Clarke who organised and ran the cake sale.

Did you see the “super blood moon”
on Monday?

Jesse and Andrew Eze did.

Very early on Monday morning my daddy woke me up and my brother. He said “stand on this chair and look at the lunar eclipse.” My mum took a picture of me. The moon seemed to be getting smaller and smaller till it was gone, because the earth was between the sun and the moon and without the light you can’t see the moon. The moon turned black and then red. It was fun and exciting.

Parent Governor Elections

Last day for the return of ballot papers is Monday 5th. October. If you have mislaid your ballot paper it can be downloaded from our website:

www.christthekingreading.co.uk
(Click on School Community, then Governors)

Both parents of a child in school can vote, but it is only one vote per parent no matter how many children you have in school

Ni Hao

We started our week in Chinese.

Reminder

Next Friday, 9th. October is a staff training day
when the school is closed to pupils.

“I come to bring you life; life in all its fullness.”

Mrs Cox's class have taken to the Blog with enthusiasm this week.

Tristan Shuttleworth told us about swimming

Before we arrived.

On Monday afternoon all the year three children went swimming. We travelled on the coach. My mum gave me a lot of instructions before school and helped me with my swimming kit.

When we got to the pool.

Solomon was my partner. It was our first time as a class going in the pool. It took a long time to get undressed. I didn't expect the water was going to be so warm! First everybody were given a float but I was so good I didn't even need one! When I got out Miss said "I'm going to call you the speedy one!" It made me feel like the best one there! I went to me and Solomon's cubicle. Again it took ages to get dressed too! (Maybe I should start practising at home?) Finally we all went back to school.

Did you enjoy this? If you did sorry because this is...

THE END

Tristan's blog is not only well written, with a range of correct punctuation and super spelling, but he has also used some great stylistic flourishes: rhetorical questions, sub-headings, ellipsis, and the fun ending. There are still things Tristan could improve, but this is a fabulous piece of writing... for a child in Year 3!

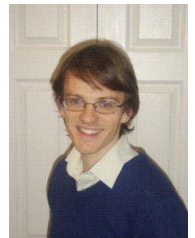

Congratulations to...

Ethan Darcy, who was man of the match in a recent game for South Reading; Caoimhe Rose who recently took part in the South Dublin Irish Dancing Championships and came 2nd. in her age group for the reel;

Well done to both of these.

Congratulations to Joseph Conlon, former pupil of Christ the King, recently appointed Professor of Theoretical Physics at Oxford University.

And congratulations to the Class of 2008 who left us 7 years ago and are off to University ...
(The ones we know about.)

Brendan Casey, studying Politics, Philosophy and Economics at Oxford; Gavin Armstrong off to Swansea to study Business and Management; Zeneb Muneer taking Law at Reading University; Jake O'Leary studying International Relations at Sheffield; Charlie Shepherd going to Dundee to study Civil Engineering. Charlie Powell has also been accepted on a university course to study computing in London, but he has chosen to defer entry for a year. Well done to all of these. If you have any information about any of our other pupils from this year group, we would love to know how they're getting on, and what they're doing.
